

12 Ways to Come Together as a Community

Responding to tragedy

As we struggle to make sense of the recent shootings at Northern Illinois University, it's only natural for individuals to want to talk and listen to one another. You may be wondering how to comfort and communicate with members of your campus community.

- 1. Hold a candlelight vigil outside in the snow or sand. At the conclusion of the vigil, place the candles on the ground in a peace sign formation and leave them to burn into the night.
- 2. Post blank pieces of butcher paper on hallway walls or on tables in the dining hall. Place markers nearby and invite individuals to share their thoughts about school violence.
- 3. Select a day to invite community members to wear NIU's colors—Cardinal Red and Black—to honor the victims and their families and demonstrate support for the NIU campus.
- 4. Have a moment of silence on campus in memory of those who were killed during the shootings.
- 5. Create a mobile of peace cranes with students in remembrance of the NIU victims. These origami birds have long been a symbol of peace, since the American attack on Hiroshima, Japan during World War II. Learn how to make them at www.wtchealingproject.org/instructions.html.
- 6. Encourage residential life staff members to bring together their individual communities for conversation and reflection. This will also provide an opportunity for reiterating safety and security tips.
- 7. Create a forum for community members to orally share their thoughts informally or formally. This could be as simple as placing a microphone and a podium in a public area or as elaborate as organizing a peace rally.

- 8. Invite students to journal their thoughts in classes. This will help them reflect individually and process worries they have about being a student at a time of such violence on a campus.
- 9. Send an email outlining the facts regarding the shootings. Encourage community members to view and review reputable news sources when gathering additional information.
- 10. Set up a large TV or projection screen in a comfortable space on campus and show the news. Invite members of the community to gather together to watch and share stories.
- 11. Create a pledge to work together to maintain a safe campus. Encourage individuals to sign it.
- 12. Bring faculty, staff and administrators together to discuss their feelings about the events. Ensure that they feel supported and safe, as well as understand safety and security protocol and procedures. It's difficult work looking out for students' best interests, especially during a time of such tragedy. These folks need care, too.

Keep Parents in Mind

Parents, especially those separated by distance from their students, are likely having a difficult time wrapping their heads around the NIU incident, too. They are important community members to consider as you work to bring your community together.

Some schools develop letters to parents. Highlight your campus security measures and remind constituents about safety tips they can use to assist in prevention efforts. Check out the free "Is My Child Safe on Campus?" pdf available with our NIU coverage. It's ready to post to your website and/or send out to parents as a way to keep them in the loop and to help set their minds at ease.
